Average Length of Official Travel Time Used

The average time required for official travel to overseas assignments during Fiscal Years 1965 and 1966 was 2.51 man-days per employee. The average official travel time for return from overseas was 6.7 man-days. The higher return travel time is due largely to the fact that many out-bound employees travel by air because of an urgent requirement for them to report overseas as soon as possible; while employees returning from overseas assignment are more inclined, and at times even encouraged, to travel more leisurely by surface transportation. The chart shown below gives by geographical area the average number of man-days used in travel time in going to and from overseas assignments during this two-year period:
